(Parliamentary Return No. 90 of 1889--and 218 of 1888.) Battleships has been decided on, viz.: British 4, French 1, Russian 2, LIST of the Lord High Admirals and First Lords of the Admiralty, from 1292 to the present time. The first use of the word Admiral that can be traced in England occurs about 1286, shortly after the return of the Crusaders from the Holy Wars; the term was probably imported from the East, where there had been Admirals among the Saracens from a very early date. The word is probably derived from the Arabic Amir or Emir, and signifies the Captain-General of the Army whether by land or sea; the original English form was Ammiral or Amiral. In early times many of the English Kings were in sea battles or went upon expeditions with their fleets. Apparently the first ship of the Royal Navy was the Great Harry, built by Henry VII., her name was afterwards changed to the Regent, and another Great Harry...
