Chapter 1 Introduction result, benefits realized include higher quality systems, improved customer satisfaction, improved processes, better communications, and increased productivity. Using IE techniques, we identified primary user requirements for a system User Requirements that would enable users to carry out their work efficiently and effectively. Identified Further, we defined all assignment phases from job design to report production, the first level of processes for each phase, and the relationships between phases. We then concentrated on the data collection and analysis processes and tasks and the specific user requirements for each task. GAO To determine the baseline of user needs, we interviewed over 150 evaluators to delineate the activities, the tasks, and the steps they completed as part of their assignments. We also obtained their input on application features needed to streamline their work. We interviewed GAO Bands I, II, and III evaluators from divisions and regional offices to ensure that we captured the different roles and responsibilities inherent in each level. The evaluators also reviewed documentation on the detailed GAOs steps of the assignment process that had been developed using Policies Procedures and Communications Manuals. The documentation identified the assignment phases and the related processes within each phase. The evaluators commented on and revised, as appropriate, the documentation to reflect the tasks and the activities they completed as part of the assignment process. GAOs Operations Improvement We also analyzed the suggestions in OIP Program () database to identify (1) potential requirements for the workpaper application and (2) focal points in the..
