As I would be civil in my turn too, I beg of them not to give themselves so much trouble upon my account, being apprehensive that great expense of breath may impair their lungs; but all to no purpose, for they assure me they will venture any thing to divert me, and so play the more. 1 Probably Sir William Stanhope, born in 1702; and John Stanhope, born Jan. 9, 1704. Besides these domestic amusements, I have likewise my recreations abroad, both pleasant and profitable: for I have won three halfcrowns of the curate at a horse-race, and six shillings of Gaffer Foxeley at a cock-match. But whether this success may not one day or other prove to my cost, by drawing me into a gaming, I cannot answer. I am afraid I have, like most memoir writers, troubled you too long with the account...
