Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: .Especial stress was laid upon the observance of the navigation acts, and a breach of them carried a liability to forfeiture of the government. Even Penn could not be allowed to do anything that would diminish the revenues of the crown. April 2, 1681, the king announced to Lord Baltimore and the inhabitants and planters already in the province that the charter had been issued.<sup>1</sup> Having received his charter, Penn immediately set about organizing his colony. After long waiting he had obtained an opportunity of giving practical shape to his ideas upon government. Thou mayst communicate to friends, he wrote Robert Turner, and expect shortly my proposals; tis a clear and just thing, and my God that has given it me through many difficulties will, I believe, bless and make it the seed of a nation. I shall have a tender care to the government that it be well laid at first. <sup>2</sup> He began at once to draught an account of the province for the information of those who might desire to emigrate. This pamphlet, which presented the advantages of the colony and outlined very briefly the privileges and powers necessary to the well-governing thereof, <sup>9</sup> was a treatise not only on Pennsylvania, but also on the advantages of colonies in general; and it was circulated widely among those who would be likely to respond to it not only in England but in Ireland, Wales, Holland, and Germany. It seems to have had considerable influence...
