Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Rural and Village Schools of Colorado: An Eight Year Survey of Each School District, 1906-1913, Inclusive The third-class school district is the unit of organization that our people have provided for the training of the children of the villages and of the open country of Colorado in the rudiments of reading, writing, arithmetic, history, geography and economics, for fitting those who have completed the prescribed course of study for entering the high school, and for giving all some understanding of the duties, privileges and responsibilities of American citizenship. The importance of the third-class school district, judged from the standpoint of the work it is charged to do, is fundamental and its efficiency of vital necessity to our state and national life. The heavy burden of responsibility that it carries and the great importance of its work, are largely overlooked because we are accustomed to consider rather the small individual district with its comparatively few pupils, than the aggregate number of districts in the state with the many thousands of pupils that these serve. Judgment,...
