The greatest difficulty some Painters meet with, is, that one of the qualities of a good picture lies in a broad light; this they imagine to consist in a flatness, reasoning thus: If it be truth that a picture, with such lights, is best, more round ones must needs be worse. A very loose argument certainly! Since nature and daily experience of round objects teach us the contrary, especially when it is not sunshiny weather. I have said before, that the contour or out-line ought to unite in the tints of the ground, that, going off from the more enlightened parts, it may not appear to so much as the others: To illustrate which, we exhibit here in plate I. aforesaid, a round pillar A. against a ground, half light, half shade; so that the light side of the pillar is set off by the shade of the ground, and the shade of the pillar by the light side of the ground. Now, it must needs follow, in order to obtain the relief, that the shade of the pillar ought to be made lighter on the extremity, that it may round off towards the light ground; otherwise...
