Not illustrated. 1886 Excerpt: .found out that they had undertaken heavy responsibilities in correspondence and literary work, which I infer became irksome to them when the novelty of their position settled down into routine work. Secondly. The annual subscriptions were inadequate to meet the expenses of printing a Journal and the other necessary charges in conducting the Society, consequently a considerable amount of liability was incurred without funds to meet it. This was the state of affairs which the President and Council found existing when they entered upon the duties entrusted to them after their election to office; and to add to these difficulties the gentlemen who had created them not only withdrew their assistance, but acted in a manner to retard the necessary work of reorganization. The financial state of the Society at the present time is such that, by exceptional contributions made by a few of the members and economy practiced by the Council, it is freed from debt. As to the future of the Society I am not in a position to predict, but I feel it my duty to invite the consideration of the members of the Council who reside so far from Liverpool that they cannot attend the meetings, and also the consideration of the members of the Society generally, to the following facts: --Firstly. The correspondence and literary labours connected with a Society constituted on the basis of this are so arduous, that it is not reasonable to expect any competent Secretary to undertake...
