Bad weather on a vacation trip acted unfavorably on his nerves and brought back his gastric troubles. Disturbances in circulation misled the physician called, who prescribed potassium bromide and iodide, 45 grn. of each a day. As digestion got worse milk-diet was prescribed. But in spite of it, or on account of it, nutrition failed, with a loss of 17 kilograms in weight. When seen again by the author he was thin and famished and had excess of free acid. The cardiac reflexes had caused the disturbance of circulation. He stopped the salts of potassium, the nervous phenomena disappeared, and his condition improved. Here was a bad diagnostic error. The milk-diet had, in this case, as in No. 1, contributed to make the gastric disturbances worse. If.milk, properly given, is the best diet after acute attacks, it will soon itself become a cause...
